What is Knee Replacement Surgery?

Knee replacement surgery — also known as knee arthroplasty — is a procedure in which damaged or diseased parts of the knee joint are removed and replaced with artificial implants made of metal, plastic, or ceramic. The primary goal is to relieve pain, restore mobility, and improve quality of life for patients suffering from severe joint conditions.

The surgery is typically recommended when conservative treatments such as medication, physiotherapy, and lifestyle changes no longer provide adequate relief.

Over 90% of patients experience significant pain relief and improved mobility after knee replacement surgery.

Recommended For

- Severe osteoarthritis
- Rheumatoid arthritis
- Post-traumatic arthritis
- Joint deformities
- Chronic knee pain unresponsive to medication
- Difficulty walking or climbing stairs
- Knee instability or buckling

Symptoms That Indicate You May Need Surgery

Recognizing the warning signs early can help you seek timely medical advice. If you experience any of the following symptoms consistently, it may be time to consult an orthopedic specialist about knee replacement options.

Persistent Knee Pain

Chronic pain that does not subside with rest, medication, or physiotherapy — even pain experienced during rest or at night

Difficulty Walking

Reduced ability to walk distances, limping, or needing support such as a cane or walker to move around

Stiffness & Swelling

Chronic stiffness that limits bending or straightening the knee, accompanied by persistent swelling and inflammation

Reduced Mobility

Significant difficulty climbing stairs, getting up from a seated position, or performing everyday activities

Types of Knee Replacement Surgery

The right surgical approach depends on the extent of joint damage, the patient's age, overall health, and activity level. Your orthopedic surgeon will recommend the most suitable procedure after a thorough evaluation.

1

Partial Knee Replacement

Only the damaged compartment of the knee is replaced. Ideal for patients with localized arthritis. Shorter recovery time and more natural knee feel.

2

Total Knee Replacement

The entire knee joint is replaced with an artificial implant. The most common procedure, suitable for widespread joint damage or severe arthritis.

3

Bilateral Knee Replacement

Both knees are replaced in a single surgery or in staged procedures. Recommended for patients with severe arthritis in both knees.

4

Revision Knee Replacement

A second surgery to replace a worn-out or failed previous implant. More complex and typically required 15–20 years after the initial surgery.

Knee Replacement Surgery Cost in Delhi

Delhi offers some of the most competitive knee replacement surgery costs in India, with prices varying based on the type of procedure, implant quality, hospital category, and surgeon expertise. Below is a general cost overview to help you plan.

₹80K–₹2L

Partial Knee Replacement

For localized joint damage with shorter hospital stays

₹1.5L–₹3.5L

Total Knee Replacement

The most common procedure for widespread arthritis

₹2.5L–₹5L

Bilateral Knee Replacement

Both knees replaced in one or two stages

These are indicative price ranges. Final costs depend on implant type (standard vs. premium), hospital facilities, surgeon's experience, ICU stay, and post-operative rehabilitation requirements. Always request a detailed cost breakdown from your hospital.

Factors Affecting Treatment Cost

Understanding what influences the final bill helps patients make informed decisions and avoid unexpected expenses. Costs can vary significantly between hospitals and individual cases.

Medical & Surgical Factors

- Type of implant used (standard, premium, or robotic-compatible)
- Single vs. bilateral surgery
- Complexity of the patient's medical condition
- Need for additional procedures or tests
- Surgeon's experience and specialization

Hospital & Recovery Factors

- Hospital infrastructure and accreditation level
- ICU and room category selected
- Duration of hospital stay
- Physiotherapy and rehabilitation program
- Post-operative medications and follow-up visits

Choosing an empanelled hospital under Ayushman Bharat can significantly reduce out-of-pocket expenses for eligible patients.
